Requiem

On a high hill in Senoia there's a grave and inscribed on it are these words, "Under the wild and sorry sigh dig my grave and let me lie, gladly that I lived and gladly die. Home is the sailor, home from the sea and a hunter home from the hills." These lines appear in another place, scrawled on a shipping tag on a compressed air container and opined to the ground with a knife...

The Roads Must Roll

It was in the middle 1950's that the automotive age began to die; the traffic engineers had long expected it. For years they had watched our vast cities sprawl and spread out, spill over in to the countryside, become more and more dependent on motor transportation. And then finally the inevitable breaking point was reached. The growing flood of cars and buses and trucks began to swamp the streets and arterial motorways. The building of roads could no longer keep pace, the superhighways clogged, congested became packed with cars bumper to bumper and the cities began to die a slow strangulation for the traffic could no longer roll...

Happiness Effect

There's the old saying "you'll do it and like it" and of course a man can by physical force make you do it but how would you like to have it so you wouldn't like it too. There are 2 basic ways that you can be happy in this world, one of course is to have everything you want in just the way you want it and never have any difficulties or troubles. This method is ideal perhaps but not very probable. The other method for absolute complete happiness would be to like anything that you got no matter what it was. The first approach is the one that makes sense of course, that's the one we work for we earn it. The other seems so much easier...

The Veldt

Ray Bradbury's The Veldt is the same story that was originally broadcast on August 9th 1951.

The soundproofed happy life home had cost thirty thousand dollars installed. It clothed and fed and rocked them to sleep and played and sang and was good to them. Their life purred on from day to day measured and controlled by the nucleonic thermostats, the eyruthium sponge thermo brains that made the beds and washed down the bathroom floors and made sure the salt cellars flowed freely without clogging. Twice a day the house paused, rang a quiet bell and turned precisely 90degrees on its axis in order that the view from the solaroid living room window might be varied to avoid ennui. Of course the pride of the house was the nursery the agent for the company had been most enthusiastic...

Adventures Of Babe Ruth

Episode 001 - Dusty Collins

The story of Babe and Dusty Collins. Dusty had lots of talent but he was a real hothead and he was proving a disruptive influence on the team.

The Yankees were having a tough season and after one particularly bad game Dusty started a fight that resulted in Sanbourne, one of the pitchers, injuring his arm so badly that he would be out of action for a month. When coach found out he was livid and wanted to know who had been involved and Babe stepped in and said it was himself. The rest of the players thought he was crazy. Why on earth would Babe want to put his own neck on the line for the sake of the good-for-nothing Dusty Collins.

Episode 002 - Dutch Reaver

Babe Ruth and Steve Martin have gone to the North woods on the opening day of the deer season. As they park the car Dutch Reavers, the Cleveland pitcher, pulls in and starts to accuse Babe of being a no-good lucky jerk and a big-mouthed punk. Steve expects Babe to be annoyed, but he is amazingly forgiving. Dutch goes into the woods and Babe and Steve set off in the opposite direction. Within a few moments there is a major shooting accident with some terrible consequences.

Episode 005 - Harry The Hat

Steve Martin is a fresh journalist out of Iowa. He's been assigned to be the personal writer for Babe Ruth.

It's his first day at work. He walks into the changing room to find Babe Ruth in a fight, but it goes from bad to worse. When the fight is over and he tells Babe that he's been appointed to be his personal writer he finds out that Babe has already told the news syndicate that he's chosen a different journalist.

Steve Martin isn't too pleased. As he sits pondering the situation he is approached by someone who gives him a real scoop to go to the papers with. His instincts tell him he shouldn't get involved, but it is very tempting.

1962 NFL Championship Game NY Giants vs Green Bay Pt1o6

For the third time in three years the Green Bay Packers have won their way in to the title game by stopping the western division of the National Football League. For the second straight year they meet the New York Giants, the eastern division champs and the Giants are out to gain revenge for the 37-0 beat hung on them at Green Bay City Stadium last year (1961).

It's a cold day in New York with the temperature at 20 degrees under a sunny sky and there's a strong north-west wind at 25-30 miles per hour sweeping over the triple deck stands and swirling inside the stadium but this is the game of the year in professional football the game that fans across the nation have been waiting for.

The first 15 minutes of this episode consists of facts and figures provided by commentator Ted Moore.

Cobra King Strikes Back - Episode 01

The ten episodes of Cobra King Strikes Back take us to Cambodia, land of the mysterious ancient folk, the land now under the sway of the cobra, the wild elephant and the tiger. Two groups of people on strangely dissimilar projects have set off from San Francisco for French Indo China. By chance they took passage on the same steam ship. Doctor Howard Carter, archeologist scientist explorer, headed one party. It was his object on this expedition to drive deep in to Cambodia in search of a lost city. In his party he has Professor Labruna a medical adviser, assistant archeologist Perry Mills and his daughter Celia, Secretary and Historian and a young Khmer student, To Kwan. Bart Friday with his right hand man Skip Turner and his secretary Patricia Young headed the second party and were doing a bit of a job for the French government. They were transferring an international prisoner, a citizen of French Indo China from Hawaii back to Saigon. By coincidence the prisoner Fin Low is of the same race as To Kwan the student in Doctor Carters party.

When Captain Friday and his sidekick Skip Turner returned to Saigon, capital of French Indo-China, following their experiences in the Cambodian jungles. They were taken immediately to Government House. They had accomplished such a satisfactory piece of work for the French Territorial Government they were immediately asked to take on another mission on route back across the Pacific to San Francisco and home. This mission had to do with flying a special type of army plane from Saigon to Australia, where it was to be torn down and shipped by boat to France. Unfortunately, engine trouble meant they had to make an emergency landing on a small island and another adventure begins.

Narrator: "Do you like ghost stories? Do you like to feel the blood run down your spinal column like the mercury in a thermometer that's been plunged in ice-cold water? Throughout the ages, people have enjoyed listening to tales of the supernatural, although few believe the supernatural exists. I was one of those cynics myself until I heard about Kay and Larry Cowling, and now, I'm not so sure. The subject of time has a lot to do with our preoccupation with ghosts. On one side of the fence we have the realists; you live your own life on Earth and you don't return. On the other side, we have the romantics, people who feel that the past is part of the present. The scoffers make fun of them, they demand proof when a ghost appears, and so far no one has been able to produce a "set of supernatural fingerprints." But tonight, we'll leave the realists and their hard-core facts and lend an ear to a pair of likable young romantics. The story of Kay and Larry Cowling can undoubtedly be explained logically, but that depends, of course, if you have a logical turn of mind".

Miser

Peter got a job about four months ago at Charlie's Food Market and one of the first jobs he did was to pick through all the fruit and veg and put the things that were turning a bit in to a box to be saved for Miss Emily Parson. But Emily Parson apparently wasn't a poor lady; she was worth a million bucks. Peter began delivering her groceries regularly and got to know her quite well but he was amazed how frugally she lived for a rich lady. Then one day Peter got himself in a spot of trouble and turned to the old lady for help only to be refused. In desperation he plans to murder her to steal the $900 that can save him.

The Birds

Escape brings you Daphne Du Maurier's story The Birds adapted for radio by Robert Wright.

Set in a farmhouse on the southern coast of England, the autumn countryside around is desolate and bleak. Nat notices that the birds on the coast are unusually restless and that the land and sea birds are mingling together in an unnatural partnership. That night he is woken by a tapping on the bedroom window and discovers a bird trying to get in. When he goes to shoo it away there are half a dozen of them and they seem to be attacking him pecking at his face and eyes with their sharp beaks.

This is a gripping tale which was previously portrayed by Lux Radio Theater on 20th July 1953 though this version is closer to Du Maurier's 1952 novel.

Country of the Blind

Zebarra is a mining engineer in Ecuador near the towering Andes. Up until a year ago his chief sport was mountaineering. His last climb was an attempt to climb the remote and forbidding peak of Parascotopetl, the 20,000-foot crag unconquered by man. It is unconquered still. 3,000 feet from the icy summit his party turned back and fled for their lives all escaping except for one, a guide named Nunez who slipped and fell over the precipice disappearing into the vast chasm which yearned 10,000-feet beneath them. The horror of him falling has haunted Zebarra's dreams for years and because of it he has forsaken climbing for the rest of his life, even though today he has seen Nunez...

This is tremendous episode of Escape. A real classic!

Frankenstein

Frankenstein Part 01 of 13

Whilst the quality of this first episode is not brilliant with some hissing, I still found myself gripped to these stories. (Note, you can be assured that the subsequent chapters were of much improved quality.) Chapter 1 begins with Baron Victor Frankenstein wandering in the white icy wastes of the North Pole in search of the monster, which he has created. A ship that has been forced to wait for the thaws picks him up. It is then that Baron Frankenstein begins to tell the story of his life and his interest in science which led to his creation. Presenting George Edwards as Frankenstein.

The Shadow People

Elaine was sitting in the library of the house late one evening. There was just one light on in the house and she was sat in a chair below it, reading a book. Several times she felt that someone or something was watching her. She walked out into the hallway, it was almost pitch black. She looked back over her shoulder and saw a huge hulking shape moving towards her. She quickly switched on the light and, as soon as the light flooded the hallway, the shape was gone!

Jack Packard and Doc Long of the A -1 Detective Agency had come to the aid of a young woman crying in her hotel room, Sunny Richards who intended to take her own life. She claimed that she had the Richards curse, which every other generation falls upon a female member of the family. Her great aunt who caused the death of her husband and her four children was responsible for the curse. And now it had befallen upon her so that her loved ones or anyone who tried to get near to her strangely meet some accidental death. Jack Packard, Doc Long and Reggie Yorke, often described as the soldiers of fortune are determined to prove that the curse is nonsense within two weeks and if they are wrong they will leave Sunny to end her life if she chooses without lifting a finger to help.

NOTE: Episode 10 of 15 is missing. If you should ever come across it I would love to be able to share it on RUSC, Ned.

I Was A Communist For The FBI

Trial By Fear

We are so accustomed to trial by jury that we forget it is one of our god given privileges guaranteed by our constitution and the bill of rights. In our way of life a man is innocent until he is found guilty but unfortunately there are other ways of life, dark devious ways in which men and women are not tried in a court of justice but in a temple of fear and terror. No jury deliberates the crime for the trial is a crime in itself. This is the story of one such trial and the terrible sentenced that was passed.

Puerto Prince Haiti like many cities of the world is a mixture in sharp contrast of the old and the new. Modern business buildings line its streets but deep in the jungle and even in the plantations outside the city the drums of voodoo still sound their pagan rhythms in the night. And again the well dressed man who steps from a limousine at the entrance of the government building is a product of the new but the thing that awaits him is as old as terror itself...

The 13th Sound

An excellent tale of murder and suspense that keeps you on the edge of your chair for the duration. The plot is quite simple and pretty much standard radio show thriller format, but the acting and sub-plot keep you interested as the story unfolds. The story starts with a wife murdering her husband. This is not a spur of the moment domestic killing, but a thoroughly well plotted, premeditated, cold-blooded killing. The wife things she has been very clever and believes she has got away with it, but her husband's death comes back to haunt her in a very peculiar way.

Banquo's Chair

Sir William Brent is the ex-head of the English Criminal Investigation. Arthur Grange knew him well and he always terrified him with his cold face, particularly his eyes. When he looked at you, you flushed with guilt. Sir William was the scourge of criminals, coldly unemotional and utterly without fear or passion. He tracked them down mercilessly and never lost a case. There was no feeling in him, no pity, no hate, nothing but terrifying cold intelligence and he was deadly to everyone he went after. Arthur Grange tells us about his last case, a case that even recalling it sends shudders through him. Grange witnessed it in all its dreadful details and wished he never had. . .

Donovan's Brain - Part 1 of 2

Donovan's Brain, the famous novel by Curt Siodmak was deemed so unusual by the producers of Suspense that it was made in two 30-minute parts. Orson Welles stars as Dr Patrick Cory who has been experimenting on keeping alive the brain of a dead monkey. When a plane crashed nearby and knowing they'd be unable to save its passenger, ruthless millionaire William Donovan, Dr Cory saw this as an opportunity to keep alive a human brain. Through telepathy he succeeded in communicating with Donovan's brain but before long it took over his whole mind and began to make him do things that he didn't know about. When his wife tried to help him Donovan's Brain in Dr Cory's mind had her committed to a sanitarium. When Dr Cory and his son David tried to kill the brain the brain paralyzed them against doing this and now had control over David. Dr Cory's thoughts were less and less his own and his mind was filled with evil fantasy. Finally Dr Cory realizes a way to set him free from Donovan's aspirations to dominate the world but David fears that the brain also knows and his plan would fail. Dr Cory tells David "it is a chance they will have to take".

Orson Welles' performance of Dr Cory and the transition between Dr Cory and Dr Cory possessed by Donovan's brain is magnificent.

Drive In (Judy Garland)

It was a rainy night the night that she let Ruth talk her in to serving the last customer that came in near midnight. When she leant in to the car to give him his order she felt something wet on her hand, something wet and red like blood. The customer said he was a doctor and had just attended a serious accident. When she was concerned about missing her last bus home he offered to take her to the bus stop. It wasn't something that she normally did, accepting lifts from customers and she hesitated before she got in to his car but he seemed such a nice looking man. If only she had trusted her initial instinct she would not be in the car of a stranger in fear of her life. . .

The Dunwich Horror

The dogs of old Dunwich village have been barking for three days and three nights and the horror to which their barking portents, this unbelievable horror must be made believable to you and must occur tonight the eve of old Hallows for tomorrow it will be too late. . .

The story begins with the birth of Wilbur Whitley. It was the night of February the 2nd 1921 toward dawn when Lavinia Whitley a deformed albino woman about 35 years old gave birth to her dark gawkish looking son in the crumbling Whitley farmhouse north east of the village. No one attended her; no one was with her except her aged half insane father who was known as Wizard Whitley so who knows what incantations Wilbur came in to this world to.

Forcast The Lodger (audition Show)

CBS Presented The Lodger as its audition program of the hugely successful radio series Suspense. Mr Alfred Hitchcock brilliant English director of such outstanding motion pictures as The Thirty-Nine Steps, Rebecca and Foreign Correspondent was eager to create a very special type of radio drama, the suspense stories. As narrator and star of his production he thought at once of the distinguished actor with whom he had been associated in countless British film successes, Herbert Marshall. Mr Marshall suggested that they dramatized a certain favorite story of his and that story happened to be the very one Mr Hitchcock had in mind, Marie Belloc-Lowndes classic in chills, The Lodger.

The Lodger is a work of fiction, which springs from recorded fact a story that begins in the year 1888 in London, a London terrorised by the fifth in a succession of recent murders. It is believed that these deeds were the works of one person, a tall gaunt figure in a black Inverness cape carrying a small narrow bag. The mysterious killer known as the Avenger preyed on young attractive blond haired women just like Daisy the daughter of the Buntings, the Buntings who had taken in a gentleman lodger...

House By The River (1hour)

Stephen Burns was a poet who'd found fame and fortune early and lives richly in comfort and adulation and who at 35 was already being compared with Keats and Shelly. He had in a few slender volumes made himself the voice and conscience of all England. His home standing on the banks of the Thames was known to a million Englishmen as the House by the River. Here he lived in peace and contentment with his wife Marjorie and his brother John. Then on the evening of June 15th last summer while Marjorie was out of the house and John not yet home he tried to kiss the maid Emily and when she protests he tries to shut her up with his hands around neck but he goes too far and kills her. When his brother John arrives home from his work in London he helps him to dispose of her body by dumping her in the river in a sack. As they are rowing back to shore Stephen remembers that his name and address are on the sack. Later when a police officer turns up with the sack Stephen tells him that it was kept in the cellar and used for collecting kindling wood. He tells the officer that his brother John was in charge of collecting the wood putting him under suspicion.

It becomes impossible for the brothers to go on living as if nothing had happened and the differences between them becomes apparent. John is wracked with remorse and torn between wanting to protect his brother and Stephen tells him that since the murder he feels alive and he is going to write it all down in a poem, the story of two men the Black Knight and the White.

This is truly Suspense at its best.

Love's Lovely Counterfeit (1hour)

When such incompatible words as Counterfeit and Lovely found themselves together in the title of this story by James Cain they said a lot not only about the story but about the men, Ben Grace as well. Elements of both words crowded through him. On the one side for example was his dislike for meanness and greed and on the other side something forged, fictitious and false.

Harry Lime: "A fellow I once knew told me I was a poet, but he was so wrong. Poets are always singing about brooks and skylarks and daffodils and the women they're faithful to in their fashion, a sort of merry widow waltz. I, if I sang at all would sing about money and the women I've known, but in an offbeat rhythm. Money and women somehow they go together and neither is much use without the other, at least that's the stuff that Harry Lime sings. That's what it was a museum, old and decayed row after row of paintings and long narrow halls of statues and tapestries and rooms filled with worn out and worm eaten furniture. It wasn't a place to live in it was just a collection of antiques and the people there had grown cold and impersonal and heartless like everything else in the house they were antiques too. That's why Steven hated the place, hated every moment he had to stay there and hated himself for staying...

The Last Day Of A Condemned Man

Andre Germaine has been condemned by the law of the state and freaky circumstance. He has been accused of his own murder and of a crime against his own family. He fought under Bonaparte, he served his country, married and fathered a child but all those things come to nothing in the cell of the condemned. He believes it is the working of a curse placed upon his father to last through all the generations of the line for having loved too well a woman who was promised to another man.

Blueprint For Suicide

The Legend the show must go on even though the heart is breaking has been played out many times upon the stages of the world but sometimes it doesn't come off just right. For instance take the case of David Dane the comedian, he's one of the most popular performers in the theater and as he stands out in the glare of the footlights on the stage of the Regents theater you'd think he'd be the most carefree man in the world. Everybody loves him he's got everything, fame, fortune and a pretty wife. And anyone who saw his wife Martha greeting him as he comes off the stage would be sure she meant what she said...

On the icy slopes way above Clear Valley ski lodge the two people racing down together side by side appeared like two moving specks of black against the sea of white. To the little man who had his field glasses trained upon them the picture was far more complete. He saw a very handsome couple the woman fresh, radiant and wholesome, the man tall and athletic. As they swung to a stop at the end of the ski slope their happiness with each other seemed very apparent, Mr and Mrs Fredrick Hecklands seemed perfectly matched. The little man with the field could not help but marvel at the strange course of true love, how it could so neatly bridge the gap between the fact of Mrs Hecklands almost fabulous wealth and the modest means of Mr Hecklands the mere ski instructor.

Death Sees Double

You have heard of identical twins haven't you? You don't run across them very often but once in a while you find two people who look so much alike that even their own parents can't tell them apart and that can lead to all sorts of complication. Take the case of Mona and Martha Spencer identical sisters who are exactly alike, their friends couldn't tell them apart. Their mother and father before they died had trouble distinguishing between them. After their parents death they were alone in the world, two devoted loving sisters, at least that's what everyone thought, two loving sisters, beautiful, popular, surrounded by admirers. Then along came Bill Edwards, handsome, successful, the catch of the season as they say and Mona caught him. . .

Death Watch

Oliver had often thought of killing his lover Lucille when she was causing so much trouble and threatening to tell his wife. He'd dreamed of killing her and the dream was so vivid he thought it had actually happened and felt impelled to go back to the scene of the crime to convince himself that it wasn't true. But why can't a man be sure about that? It's such an awful thing to do, to kill a human being. He didn't feel any remorse, just hunger so he felt he couldn't possibly have killed her.

Harvest of Death

It wasn't a large farm, but it wasn't small, either. It kept two strong men busy from sunup to sundown taking care of it. And they did a nice job because the farm prospered. Mort Grant owned the farm and lived in an awkward looking unpainted farmhouse with his wife, Nellie. Jim Hayward was the hired man and lived in a spare bedroom. Actually, he had been there so long he was more like one of the family than a hired hand. And that's what worried Mort.

Hasty Conclusion

Professor Wagner sat in his office in the old brick chemistry building a late issue of the chemistry journal open on the desk before him. The sounds of the campus and the reassuring tic of his secretary's typewriter made him feel sleepy unable to concentrate on the article he was reading. It was in fine print and the professor found himself tempted to drop it in to the waste paper bin. But he was forced to continue reading. When the Dean published the rest of the department was expected to read it. Suddenly he turned back the pages and re-reads the article more carefully his mind shuffling between memory and suspicion. Why was it all so familiar?

Man In The Storm

The storm with its heavy rainfall has swollen the river near Groves Landing to the point where the town is seriously threatened. But more important there is the dread danger that Groves Hall, the recreation building will topple in to the waters and be destroyed. Groves Hall, the building that Reed campaigned for five years ago, the building he helped design, the building he was supposed to have taken out all cover insurance on but as city treasurer omitted to do so, pocketing all of the premiums instead.

Man In The Trench Coat

It was clearly a mistake a perfectly natural understandable mistake that could have happened to anyone and it happened to Wally Layton. But he wasn't yet aware of that mistake as he strolled out of the North Beach restaurant the trench coat draped over his arm, and walked back to the parking lot. As he approached his car Wally reached in to the coat pocket for his keys and a strange puzzled expression crossed his face as he withdrew an unsealed envelope, opened it and discovered a lot of money folded neatly inside the envelope...

The Man Who Bought Death

Love makes the world go round so they say but it also causes a lot of trouble. Take for instance the case of Eddie Ford and Ruth Spreight, they were in love and had been for a long time, childhood sweethearts the kind of thing that usually brings nothing but happiness and good fortune. But Eddie and Ruthie were born on the wrong side of town. They grew up on Second Avenue and that's not exactly the best environment. Eddies love for Ruth began to show itself in the wrong way. At 7 he stole an apple for her, at 14 he stole a car to take her for a ride, at 17 he'd spent his first night in jail and at 22 he is established as a small crook in town. . .

The Man Who Died Twice

It wasn't until a year or more after his second death that the public learned the facts in the case of Stash Wilk and made him famous posthumously as the man who died twice. That was an interesting story in itself but it was really only a prologue to a bigger story one which the public never knew in full. Four people were involved, Stash, his brother John, his lawyer Ben Meadow and his girl Eddie Shelby. But the real center of the story was an oil drum containing $400,000 in currency buried near a lonely highway. . .

Manhunt

For over an hour, the man in the trench coat had been standing at the window of the penthouse atop the Chase Weatherly apartment building staring down into the rain swept streets below. The panic, the fear was gone now, and his mind was functioning smoothly and efficiently. The situation was no longer completely hopeless because out of the nightmare, a solution had emerged, a bold dangerous solution; a fantastic plan really, but it could work. And for him, there was no choice, he had to take this one chance for survival, his own survival.

The spotlight suddenly changed from white to a delicate blue and the small nightclub orchestra slid in to three quarter time as the dance team began their waltz. The Croytons Clive and Marie had held top billing at the club for almost a year and it was well deserved. But now it was all eyes on Marie and her husband Clive now seemed too old for her and her agent wanted to team her up with a new partner named Ricky. But Clive tells her that as long as she dances professionally she will dance with him, he has no intention of giving her up either as a dancer or a wife.

Question of Murder

The terrible truth underlying it all didn't come to Carol Randolph as a bolt out of the blue; rather it came slowly like the gathering of a summer storm. In the beginning there was only a gentle rustling like the movement of the leaves before a wind, more to be sensed than actually seen. Later there were other signs, more threatening, more violent and at last the storm broke in all its fury. But that was later. It began that first day after the honeymoon when they came back to the old house that held so many memories for Ted. Carol paused smiling at the threshold wondering if he would observe the sentimental custom of carrying her across. And he did, but when he had set her down again somehow she realized it had been a mistake...

Katherine Ford sits in the library of the Ford mansion and ponders over the past. For 12 years now, Katherine has been the wife of Andrew Ford, a wealthy manufacturer. Andrew Ford is now retired and spending his time and money collecting gems. He has a daughter Alice whose mother died a few years after Alice was born. Alice is a lovely girl. Katherine wonders what her own child would have been like at the age of 20. Katherine had a child 20 years ago, a child she hasn't seen in 19 years. She never told Andrew about any of her past, and now, her past may just catch up with her.

The Thin Line

It's a thin line that separates infatuation from hate. So thin and fragile that one can change in to the other in a split second. Mark Mahler would agree now that the line was a thin one if he were alive. But he didn't discover it until too late. That was the trouble with Mark he always discovered things too late. When he discovered that marrying an old woman for her money doesn't lead to happiness it was too late. When he discovered he was in love with Artise Mayo, her pretty companion it was too late...

Three Wise Guys

Twas the night before Christmas and all through the house, not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse. Even Broadway, that glamorous avenue of make believe in far away New York seemed empty, deserted. Most cafes and eating places were closed, but the doors of those occasional refuge for those hearty souls who prefer to walk alone were still open. Such a place was Good Time Charley's Bar on 49th Street, where, on another Christmas Eve, a series of unusual events began, ending in one of the most unusual stories Good Time Charley had ever listened to.

Standing at the window of the cheap hotel room and looking out over the outline of lights and neon that was Kansas City after sundown Eve Benton felt a dread pressing sense of loneliness. That the condition would pass she was certain, she'd managed before she would manage again someday. But she wasn't thinking of that now, Eve Benton was being sorry for herself, forgetting her good points, the quiet restless beauty in her face and solemn attractiveness of her features. She was annoyed at the city and the world. She raised the window as though voicing her resentment and she heard other words nearby. They came from the next room...

Ticket To Paris

The young attractive dark-haired girl looked out through the dirty windowpane of the old bookshop. She watched the rain as it fell on Olive Street. Then a few minutes after 10:00 she locked the shop door, turned out the light, and stood for a moment in the darkness. The sound of the thunder rang in the distance. She rubbed her arms and shuddered and then hurried through the darkened bookstore. She would always live in terror of the dark, of even the next moment so long as one man remained alive, the man who was living only to kill her. She had been forced into the back streets of obscurity to escape him. And although she despised this grim little bookshop where she worked for the old woman named Hattie Simmons, the job paid for her keep and provided her with more safety than she could find anywhere else. As she reached the door to her room at the back of the shop, she stopped and listened. There was someone in the room, searching the darkness. She threw open the door and switched on the light.

If it were possible somehow to stand at some point in the distant future and look back at the life of Robert Bolton we'd find it neatly divided in to two halves, divided by a matchstick. The first half was successful; Robert was an egotist whose egomania led him to believe that because he'd given the world the ecstatic pleasure of his company for thirty-two years it owed him a living in return. He lived by his wits and because they were extraordinary wits he managed to dodge, double in his tracks like a smart half-back avoiding tacklers and keep one jump ahead of the law and then one day shortly after the train he was riding on pulled in to the little country town of Redmond Robert standing on the station platform put a cigarette in to his mouth and reached in to his pocket for a match. The man stood at the railing of the Jefferson Bridge looking over the rails hesitant undecided. In a way it was a foolish move on the other hand he didn't know. He finally made up his mind, put his foot on the rail and then stopped suddenly at the sound of steps. A half minute later he made up his mind, disappeared over the side. It was a good gamble the hat he'd seen on the ground near the bridge timbers was nearly new. He smiled to himself started to try it on and then saw something in his tracks that stopped him frozen. Not six feet away was the battered body of a man sprawled on the ground near one of the bridge stanchions. He paused for a minute thinking then moved quickly to the body and searched the pockets. He wasn't lucky this time there was no money no identification not even a pocket-handkerchief and then as he stumbled for a nametag inside the hat he discovered something else tucked under the sweatband was a slim black covered checkbook. He just had time to stuff it in his pocket when the sound of steps on the bridge above told him the strolling officer had returned. There was only one thing to do he called the officer over. And that's how it began with a dead man and a checkbook with stubs that showed a bank balance of over $100,000, which he considered a windfall. . .

Bert Lahr

Crosby hosting the Kraft Music Hall with all the added comedy that comes out of having so many people coming and going and the bonus of Bing breaking into song every time he can find an excuse and a cue leads him into it. There's a touch of nostalgia about these shows. I guess it's because they were made during World War 2. The guest star on this show is Bert Lahr, or you may remember him as the cowardly lion in "The Wizard of Oz."

Variety & Music: Breakfast Club with Don McNeill

Various Guests

As you can see this episode was originally broadcast on the morning of Monday the 8th of December 1941, which was of course, the day after Japan attacked Pearl Harbor. After about 11 minutes the show is interrupted with a special news bulletin announcing that England has declared war on Japan. From a historical point of view this is a very interesting episode of The Breakfast Club. Don McNeill still manages to introduce some guests and there is plenty of music but not surprisingly News Bulletins are quite frequent.

Variety & Music: Chamber Music Society of Lower Basin Street

Benny Carter

The Chamber Music Society of Lower Basin Street bring you a memorable concert dedicated to the perpetuation of the classic three B's, Barrel House, Boogie Woogie and the Blues. Presented by the societies chairman "Dr Gino" Hamilton you will hear some of America's noblest classics performed by the instrumentation for which they were written by small chamber groups. In toto these groups are the Dixieland Little Symphony or octet conducted by Henry Lavine and the ten termite proof woodwind of maestro Paul Lavalle. Also in this program are two famous guests, as visiting commentator Dr Charles Edward Smith, co-author and co-editor of the book "Jazzmen" , and as soloist the virtuoso on not one instrument but two, trumpet and saxophone, Professor Bennet Lester Carter.

Just take a look at the amazing list of stars making an appearance in this ninety minute special; Bing Crosby, Dinah Shore, Jimmy Durante, Bette Davis, Marlene Dietrich, Burgess Meredith, Ginny Simms, Frank Sinatra, Lucille Ball, Cary Grant, Loretta Young, Lena Horne, Johnny Mercer, Edward G. Robinson, Orson Welles, Danny Kaye, Herbert Marshall, Claudette Colbert, and Ed Gardner.

Before the stirring Command Performance theme at the start of the show the following words are read very movingly.

Oh God thou Heavenly Father

Grant us peace, thy most precious gift

Oh thou eternal source of peace

And enable us to be a messenger of peace

Unto the people of the earth

Bless our country

That it may ever be a stronghold of peace

And the advocate of peace in the council of nations

May contentment reign within its borders

Health and happiness within its homes

Strengthen the bond of friendship and fellowship

Between all the inhabitants of our land

Plant virtue in every soul

And may thy love of thy name hallow every home and every heart

Praise be thou oh Lord

Giver of peace

Command Performance was referred to as "the best war time program in America" and this hour and a half special is a compilation of the very best that the show had to offer. I hope you get as much pleasure, and hope, out of listening to this wonderful show as I did today.

"Thanksgivings day is a truly American holiday, yet sometimes we fail to appreciate the things we collectively have to be thankful for. Today especially in the wake of a war with demigods and bigots attempting to set one group of Americans against another it seems more vital than ever that we pause to consider the ideas and the ideals upon which our nation has sprung. A few weeks ago in our nations capital the most precious documents belonging to the people of the United States were removed from the archives and placed aboard the freedom train for all to go and see, to look at the words of liberty, the documents of justice, those papers that guarantee equality for all Americans. They will remind you that we the Americans have much to be thankful for. It is with this in mind that we bring you tonight's story of a man who turned his back on his heritage."

Emma Schaver Partisan Song (in Yiddish).

Emma Schaver sings Partisan Song in Yiddish (a combination of German and Hebrew languages).

As a note of interest the Partisans were irregular forces which used guerrilla tactics when operating in enemy-occupied territory. During the Holocaust, partisans operated secretly in their efforts to assist Jews and others persecuted by the Nazis.

Vera-Lynn-When-The-Lights-Go-On-Again

Sung by Vera Lynn, the sweetheart of the British soldiers of World War II.

Lyrics

When the lights go on again all over the world
And the boys are home again all over the world
And rain or snow is all that may fall from the skies above
A kiss won't mean "goodbye" but "Hello to love"

When the lights go on again all over the world
And the ships will sail again all over the world
Then we'll have time for things like wedding rings and free hearts will sing
When the lights go on again all over the world

instrumental break

When the lights go on again all over the world

This was a mid-WW2 song. The title refers to the practice of having to black out possible bombing targets and to avoid back-lighting targets for bombs.

Streets Of Laredo

From Hollywood comes your All Star Western Theatre starring America's great western singers Foy Willing and the Riders of the Purple Sage bringing you music, a song and a story of the west.

The prosperous western cattle town of Benson City is what you might call a one-man town. Dave Benson sees to that and it's been that way since the forty-some odd years since he first set foot on the strip of wasteland that is now the thriving little city bearing his name. About the only mark on Dave Benson's honesty and integrity is his wayward nephew Todd Benson who spends so much time thinking up ways to extract money from uncle that he has very little or no time for usefulness. With such a situation on hand as unimportant as it may seem suppose we visit in Benson City for a spell and see what transpires when the riders of the Purple Sage wander in to town...

Emily Bracket

From all that Chad Remington has noticed death, sudden and brutal death is as shocking in a frontier town as any place else in the country. But somehow in the frontier folks seem better able to pull them selves together and go on with the things that have to be done. And so it was that Emily Bracket over her first shock at her brother Tim's killing had regained some of her composure and was able to answer a few questions...

Forest Fire

Chad Remington is a frontier lawyer in Dos Rios. Somehow or other it seems that the best in folks and the worse in folks is brought out in the day-to-day battles for just raw existence in the frontier country. I guess you've heard the expression "it takes fire to fight fire" well something happened to Chad Remington recently which makes him want to rewrite that old adage. You see a few weeks ago he and his friend ex-medicine man Cherokee Obannon were riding back to Dos Rios when they smelt wood smoke and then were almost killed by deer hunters.

Her Name Is Burbon Kate

Last winter had been an especially severe winter, colder than usual with almost constant snows so deep and heavy that even the winter range was useless, cattle froze, starved and died right and left. It was late in February up in the mountain town appropriately named Headstone, the principle business building in Headstone is a long narrow room operated as a café or saloon and run by a strange hard faced woman called Burbon Kate. This particular night was a blustery one, Kate's saloon was empty for a change and Kate stood behind the bar cleaning up and polishing glasses when suddenly the door opened and the sheriff entered...

In a cow town a frontier town you don't need much of an office but if you really want to find me my one room suite is upstairs over Cherokee O'Bannon's livery stage. There's a sign out on the side ally with my name on it, Chad Remington. I don't want you to think that there isn't much for a country lawyer to do in Los Rios because with the pack of people who've settled the frontier and whose places sprawl over it we've got all kinds, the good and meek, the loud and leathery. When in Rome

As a prelude to the following shows, Have Gun, Will Travel here is an insight into the main character and some background information about the shows, which you're sure to enjoy. As suggested by the title, Have Gun, Will Travel is a western adventure. The main character is Paladin, a gunfighter wandering in search of adventure. He does the work that others would not or could not do for themselves and although he does them for a price he is still a man with a conscience. His headquarters is the Carlton Hotel in San Francisco, where Paladin lives and has a cordial but cool relationship with the Bellhop whom he refers to as Heyboy. In the dictionary a Paladin is a chivalrous person a knight errant and Paladin uses the symbol of a white chess knight on his card announcing his services with the words "Have Gun, Will Travel/Wire Paladin/San Francisco". He often wines and dines beautiful women in need of his services and presents them with his card. Each show starts with a great opening line, which on their own are enough to leave you wanting more. See for yourself!

Lefty Roberts

Early rain has brought an abundance of grass to Paradise Valley so much grass that outsiders have driven their cattle there to graze. These men away from their home ranches surrounded by strangers have worked out laws of their own, hard strict laws but to them a very real way of administering justice. Among these men is an older man named Lee Fox and his younger sidekick Lyn Dean whom he has looked after for twenty years since Deans father died. Lyn Dean is in trouble and asks Fox to swap clothes with him and horses so that the man who has the job will follow the wrong man giving Dean a chance to live. Fox rides around all day and finally ends up at Roy Rogers Ranch for food and rest. Later that evening someone shoots Lee Fox posing as Lyn Dean.
